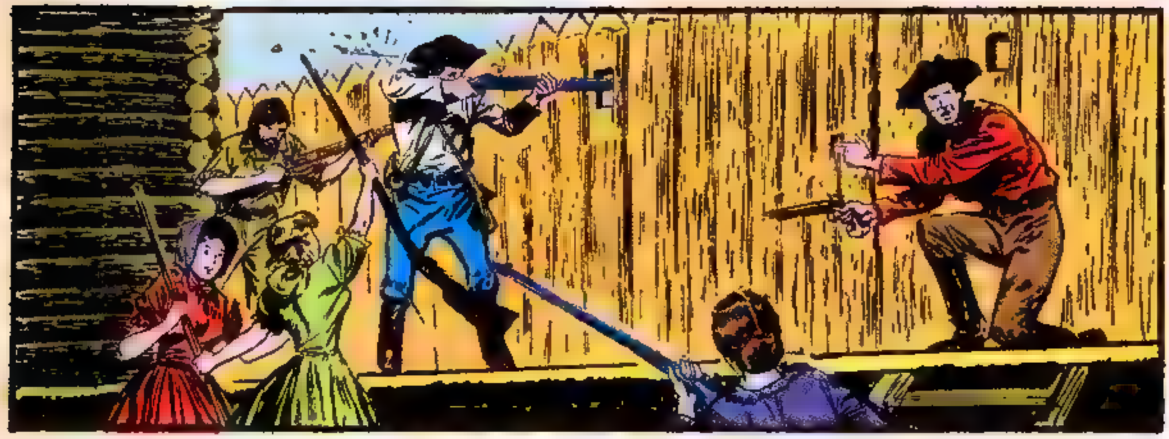
WOMEN OF COURAGE



ANCIENT history records the cases of many foreign women warriors who saw combat alongside men. Our own country can also boast of courageous women who entered the field of battle.

Best known, of course, was "Molly Pitcher," who went on serving her husband's gun on the field of Monmouth after the artilleryman was disabled.

She was born in 1754 of German immigrant stock. Since her parents were not too prosperous, making a bare living out of their Trenton, New Jersey, dairy farm, the teen-age girl was placed in the house of Dr. William Irvine, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, as a servant. At the age of fifteen she fell in love with John Casper Hays, and soon married him.

When Hays, in 1777, enlisted in a Pennsylvania artillery regiment, his wife returned to her family's farm. To do her bit for the war, she cooked and washed for the soldiers of a nearby camp.

Arriving near Monmouth, where her husband's regiment was, she won undying fame there by carrying water to the wounded. It was the soldiers who lovingly gave her the name by which she is known in history—Molly Pitcher.

Hours later, during the bitterest fighting on the field, Molly saw her husband fall away from his gun. Fighting back the tears, Molly first tended to his wounds, and then manned his gun.

There was another brave woman in the same war whose exploits amazingly paralleled those of Molly Pitcher. But, for some reason, the name of Margaret Corbin is hardly known today. Margaret's husband, also an artilleryman, was stationed at Fort Washington following the Battle of Long Island. And when he fell at his post, Margaret went on serving his gun.

Margaret must have been wounded in this battle for in July, 1799 a resolution in Congress referred to her as disabled by wounds. Congress voted her a pension "for her natural life or continuance of said disability." The allotment was for "one-half the monthly pay drawn by a soldier" and "out of the public stores, one suit of clothes or the value thereof in money."

Both Molly Pitcher and Margaret Corbin went out to do battle as women. But at least one brave American woman actually joined the army, and held her own with the best of our fighting-men.

The woman was Deborah Samson, the daughter of an impoverished pioneer. Deborah was always too poor to play with the other little girls in her area, for she was forced to work as an adult while still a child.

Nor was she able to attend school She learned how to read and write by borrowing the school books of other children. At the age of eighteen, she put herself through school by hiring out as a common laborer, to a farmer.

But poor Deborah had no standing in the community. Dressed like a male laborer, and doing a man's job for the sake of earning money for her education, she was shunned by the other girls.

But what was worse, there was, back in the 1700's, no woman's work for her to do. It was probably that fact that made her decide to join the army.

Part of her duties on the farm had been to sew the clothes for the family Now this skill worked for her advantage She sewed up a suit of man's clothes for herself, and, in October 1778, joined the company of Captain Nathan Thayer of Medway, Massachusetts, giving her name as Robert Shirtliffe.

But she almost gave herself away at once, for, when a uniform was given to her, she cut it over to make it fit better. The other soldiers stared at this feminine reaction, but she explained it away by saying that she had been apprenticed to a tailor before joining the army

For three years Deborah Samson served as a common soldier, hiding from all the fact that she was actually a woman. Private Shirtliffe was admired by the other soldiers for "his" great bravery.

Deborah was wounded two times in battle. The first was a head wound. But the second wound, a serious one, led to her discovery. It was believed that Pvt. Shirtliffe was dying, and "he" was sent to an army hospital. The surgeon, Dr Binney, of Philadelphia, discovered that his patient was a woman.

But Dr. Binney did not give her away at once. Instead, he went to Deborah's commanding officer, who devised a plan to discharge his woman warrior without injuring her reputation. When Deborah recovered; she was given a letter to deliver to General George Washington.

Washington read the letter, which contained her story, then looked up at the private with a smile He did not reveal that he knew her true identity. Instead, he thanked her for her glorious contribution to the war, and handed her a discharge and money to take her home.

Washington never forgot his lady private. After he became President, he invited her to visit him.

Some years later, Deborah married Benjamin Gannett of Sharon, Massachusetts, a small businessman. By 1795, she was the mother of three children, but the family finances were in very poor shape. If it weren't for this, the story of Deborah might never have become known. For, needing money urgently, she offered to tell her story in a magazine of the time, the Female Review.

Paul Revere, a prosperous citizen by now, read the story and went out of his way to meet Deborah. Then, some years later, when he learned that Deborah was in embarrassing financial straits again, appealed to congress for a pension for the ex-soldier, recommending her as "a woman of handsome talents, good morals, a dutiful wife and an affectionate parent."

Congress responded by voting its only female fighter a modest pension.

THERE IT IS—
WITH A PHENOMENALLY-EXACT TOSS, SHE LASSOED THE TIARA--- I'VE GOT IT—WITHOUT A SINGLE SCRATCH TO THE PLANE OR TIARA!

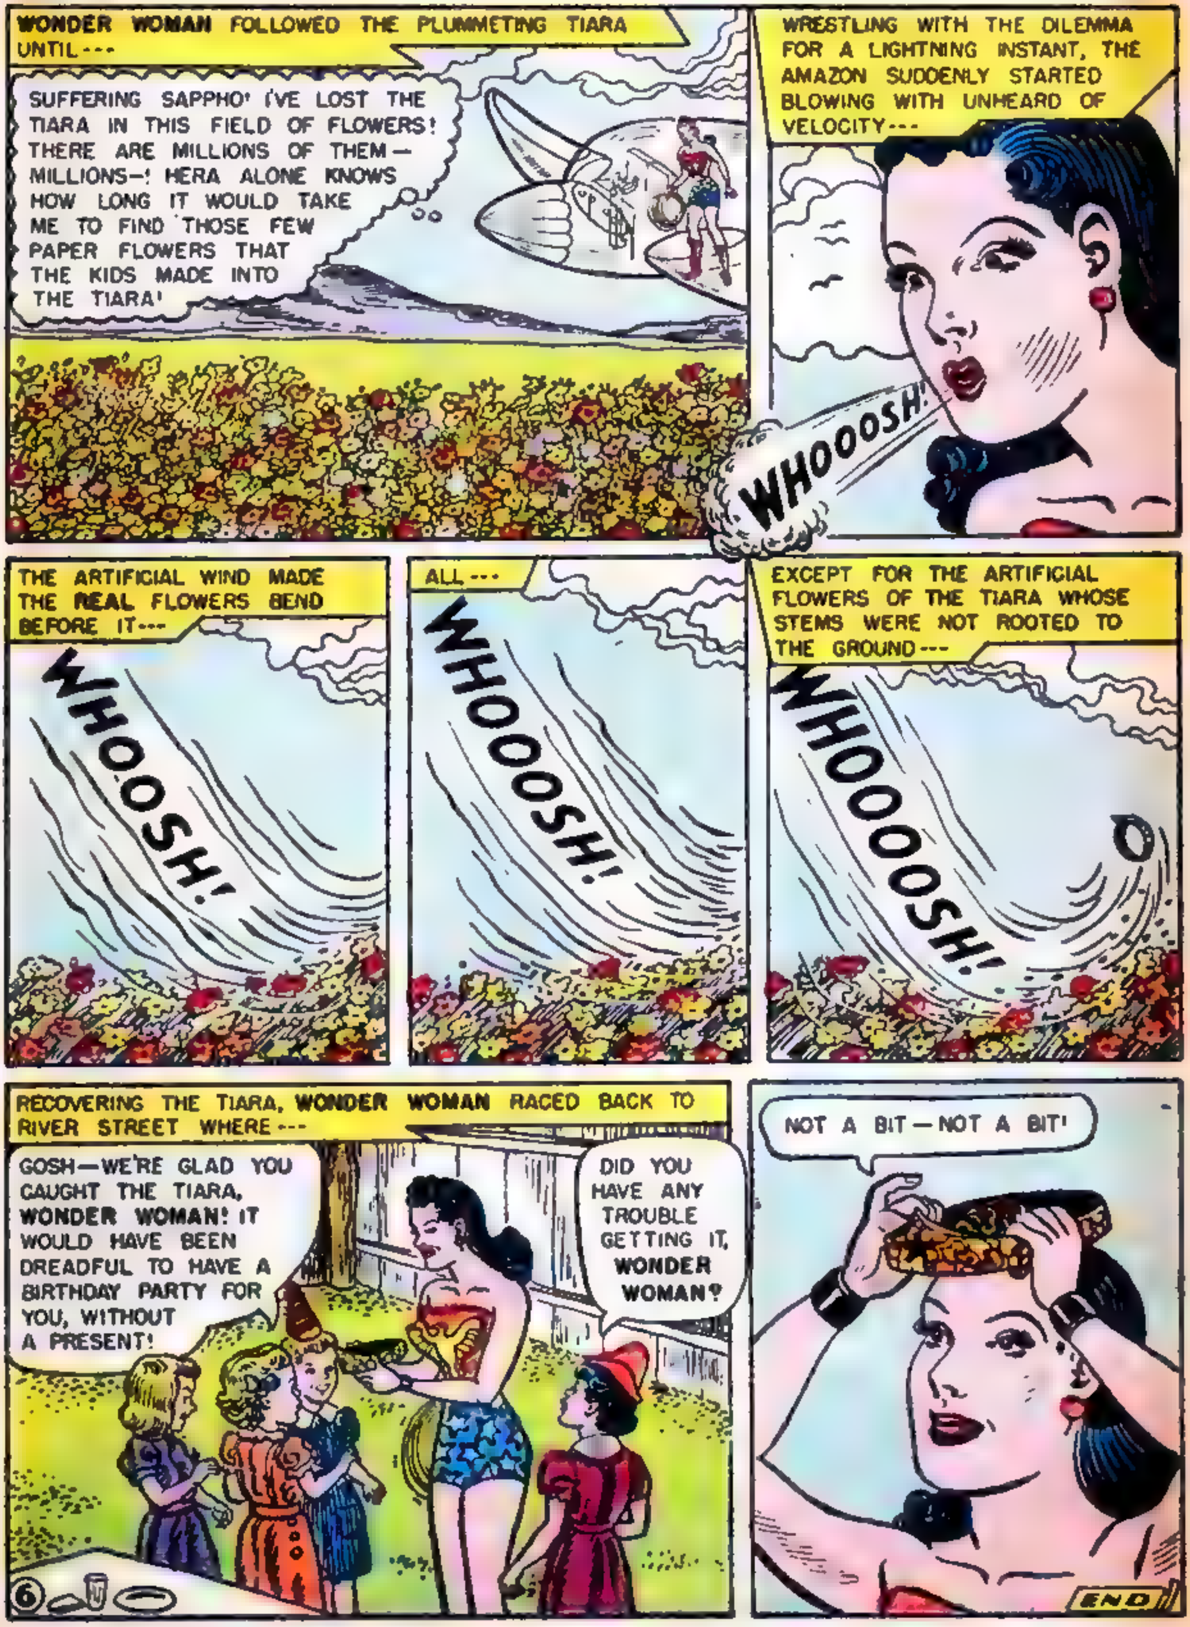
MERCIFUL MINERVA! THAT BOLT KNOCKED THE TIARA RIGHT OUT OF MY LASSO!



WONDER WOMAN FOLLOWED THE PLUMMETING TIARA UNTIL---
SUFFERING SAPPHO! I'VE LOST THE TIARA IN THIS FIELD OF FLOWERS! THERE ARE MILLIONS OF THEM—MILLIONS—! HERA ALONE KNOWS HOW LONG IT WOULD TAKE ME TO FIND THOSE FEW PAPER FLOWERS THAT THE KIDS MADE INTO THE TIARA!
WRESTLING WITH THE DILEMMA FOR A LIGHTNING INSTANT, THE AMAZON SUDDENLY STARTED BLOWING WITH UNHEARD OF VELOCITY--- WHOOOSH!
THE ARTIFICIAL WIND MADE THE REAL FLOWERS BEND BEFORE IT--- WHOOSH!
ALL---
WHOOOSH!
EXCEPT FOR THE ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS OF THE TIARA WHOSE STEMS WERE NOT ROOTED TO THE GROUND--- WHOOOOSH!
RECOVERING THE TIARA, WONDER WOMAN RACED BACK TO RIVER STREET WHERE---
GOSH—WE'RE GLAD YOU CAUGHT THE TIARA, WONDER WOMAN! IT WOULD HAVE BEEN DREADFUL TO HAVE A BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR YOU, WITHOUT A PRESENT!
